In July 1991, the federal government filed a lawsuit in Louisiana for violations of the Clear Water Act stemming from the persistent discharge of PCBs from a natural gas compression station. The United States alleged in its complaint that Tennessee Gas Pipeline Company (a subsidiary of Tenneco) polluted Natchitoches, a quaint town best known as the setting for the movie Steel Magnolias. During an initial settlement conference, the government trial attorney informed defense counsel that if the case were to be tried to a jury, Dolly Parton (a Steel Magnolia) would be commissioned to sing the theme song, I Can't Give You No T.L.C., When My Breast Milk's Filled With PCBs.¹
